

Richard T. LaRoche

A graduate of New England School of Art, LaRoche is an award-winning and long-standing member of a number of professional art organizations. His paintings are represented in several private and corporate collections.

Referring to himself as a “painter of New England mood,” LaRoche believes that an emotional affinity with his subjects is vital to making a good painting. Striving to depict how a painting should “feel” rather than how it should “look,” with a glance it becomes clear to any viewer that mood is a priority in all of LaRoche’s work. With power and accomplished flair, he depicts the world around him awash with feeling, and a deeply rooted sense of appreciation.

Guy LeBlanc

Museum Services Coordinator, Wayside Inn Gallery

