“Art exploring the beauty and mystery of nature and spirit.”

Art has always been an integral part of Heather’s life, even though she has no formal training. She grew up surrounded by easels and paint brushes while her mother taught numerous art classes out of her childhood home. Trained as a physician, she chose pathology as a specialty after being drawn to the beautiful world she experienced under the microscope. To deal with the stress of her career Heather turned to yoga and daily meditation which unexpectedly led her to realize she needed to make more time and space in her life to explore her creative path. So in 2009, she left her pathology practice of six years for a part time position with another group to do just that. Heather uses multiple washes and dry brush work to create vivid, photorealistic traditional watercolors and mandalas. She believes our modern lives have become so overfilled with technology and multitasking that we take for granted the beauty that is all around us. She hopes her artwork will serve as a vehicle to remind us and reawaken us to the beauty and mystery of nature and spirit.
